EMPOWER WOMEN / EDUCATE CHILDREN

"I come from a family of 9," writes Joyce Munai, "I grew up in rural Olpusimoru and my father was a drunkard. My mother has struggled due to these large numbers of children. I count myself as the lucky few who managed to complete high school because of my OFDC sponsor. I was even more lucky an OFDC donor took me to college and I graduate with an advanced certificate in Information Technology."

"Early this year I got a job as a Secretary at Olpusimoru Primary School. I will always treasure your support not only to me but to all the children OFDC donors support."

Thank you all,
Joyce Munai, Kenya

ENHANCE HEALTH for ALL

Students at Olokirikirai Primary School now have clean water. You provided funds for the well materials, parents carried those materials (sand, cement and brick) to the site and the fundi, or expert, hand dug the well - 83 feet deep. Asante sana (thank you).

Patrick Ngigi works hard to stretch your donation as far as possible. Patrick, pictured above with awards, "pushes" schools he heads to excel in scholarship, sports and music.

Patrick recently received his BA and is now an MBA candidate. Our hats off to Patrick!

Sarah, OFDC intern, and Nia prepare for September travel to Kenya

"Does OFDC have a job opening?" the email asked. "No," I replied, "we are volunteer-powered." "Do you need a volunteer?" the returned email inquired. "Yes!" I replied. Thus Sarah became OFDC's intern, just as Mary, now board member, had done. Thanks to Sarah, OFDC's social network includes a blog and Facebook. She joins me in Kenya to verify your donated dollars are doing good things - Nia Sherar (Founder/Exec Director)
